

Dou pass out of the docking yard and through a long corridor. Mannequins line the walls on each side, arranged in all manner of poses and colours.

“Hurry up,” croaks one as you walk past. “Much to do.”

“So... really, who lives here?” asks Faegan.

“Scientist named Pig,” says Wentworth. “Species, sex... unknown. No one sees Pig.”

“Pig prefers the pronoun ‘it’,” you add. “Don’t know if it’s a real person living somewhere in the station, or some kind of program. And we don’t ask.”

“No, you don’t,” whispers a nearby mannequin.

Faegan glances at it, wide-eyed. “Where’d the name come from?”

“Me, actually,” you confess. “I told it about the nightmares I’ve been having all my life, and it liked the description of one of the creatures I dreamed up.”

“Do you name all the creatures from your dreams?” asks Tif, smiling.

You’re about to answer with something sarcastic, but suddenly you arrive at the end of the hallway. A green mannequin stands in front of another sealed door. One palm outstretched towards you – ‘halt.’

“Wait until I have collected all of my water,” it says.

Tif raises her eyebrows. “It’s on our ship?”

“Don’t get any ideas,” mutters Wentworth. “Made us disable the cameras.”

“But it’s ON OUR SHIP?”

You let them hash it out – some numbers have appeared on a datascreen attached to the door...
